Fine Print

Greyhounds must be considered “house pets”. Their single coat and short fur make them unsuitable for spending long periods of time outdoors during the colder and warmer months of the year. They are comfortable when you are comfortable, and when you find the need for extra covering (sweater, coat, etc) so do they. Greyhounds were first hunters, then racers. Their hunting skills are usually dormant except when the lure can be seen passing the starting gate, or when small animals, including small dogs, cats, rabbits and squirrels, etc., are in the vicinity. In groups of three or more their highly developed pack instinct can take over with the right provocation, and they can be transformed rapidly from otherwise very gentle docile pets. Given their quick and unique racing skills, leash laws should be strictly observed, leashes must NOT be more than two metres (six feet) in length, and retractable leashes must NOT be used. If off-leash, a completely fenced area is mandatory; a greyhound should be exercised for at least 30 minutes once daily to maintain its healthy wellbeing. If you cannot guarantee your greyhound with at least the above level of comfort, security and exercise, then a greyhound is not for you.

The GSNCR is an adoption facilitation group – and as a result, it works with different adoption groups to facilitate the adoption of retired racing greyhounds. The GSNCR is a not-for-profit organization dedicated to the wellbeing of retired racing greyhounds in general, and those adopted into homes, especially in the National Capital Region, Ontario & Quebec. Due to its role, the GSNCR does incur certain costs while ensuring that the right retired racing greyhound goes to the right “forever” home. As a consequence, GSNCR attaches an operation fee to the adoption application process. In addition, a donation of $200.00 US is requested by the adoption kennel to assist with costs related to safeguarding the health and welfare of greyhounds in their care. This donation is payable at the time of adoption.

Please include fifty dollars ($50.00) CAD with this application. This operation fee is non-refundable regardless of the final outcome of the adoption process itself.
